

There was a sharp line separating the soft ocean from the frozen shelf. The ice is solid yet it changes form, not through force but through gentle knocks of ocean waves.
With each tap some water melts, as if the ice needs the water to open its heart and all melt into one.