

Somewhere at the very North

By Alexandra Filippova

Somewhere, at the end of the Globe
Beyond the horizon, at the very North
Lies a barren landscape, seemingly dead
Ice floating on water, but surrounded by land

Although the icy kingdom is hostile and harsh
Rich wildlife is full of wonders
Both marine and on land

The thriving ecosystem is resilient and strong
Surviving through hardships, cold winds and the snow
Yet even the strongest could be down on their knees
When someone like humans come bearing the gifts

Water pollution, pollution of air,
Carbon release into the atmosphere
Souring temperatures, shrinking of ice
Leaving no chance for some to survive

What are we doing?
Who gave us the right?
Destroy whole ecosystems
Leaving no one behind

Here right this moment the time has come
For you to start doing what we all should have done
Lower your footprint, slow down the climate change

Help to save the future of the polar bears.
